Cybersecurity: What Every In-House Counsel Needs to Know (and Outside Counsel Should Tell Them)

Time: Wednesday, January 24, 2018 at 1PM-2PM eastern

Description: Cyber security is an issue that permeates every aspect of our lives from politics to finance to social media. It is a subject that is particularly important for businesses all sizes to understand and proactively address. In-house counsel can longer assume that cyber security and data privacy are being handled by the information technology department. It is imperative that company lawyers be not just proficient in cyber security, but also prepared to advise the corporation, including its executives and directors, on related issues, such as identification of data assets, breach prevention, investigation, and incident response. A panel of experts will address what in-house counsel need to know about cyber security and what they should be doing to protect the company from data beaches and related liability.

Speakers:

Sheila Slocum Hollis, Partner, Duane Morris, LLP - Washington, D.C

Elizabeth S. Dillon, Senior Associate, Cetrulo LLP – Boston, MA

Ken Mortenson, Data Protection Officer, Global Trust & Privacy, InterSystems Corporation – Cambridge, MA

Moderator:

Michael J. Cahalane, Partner, Cetrulo LLP – Boston, MA
