Trump inherited over 100 vacant judiciary seats to fill at the beginning of his presidency

Number of Federal Judicial Vacancies At the Beginning of Each President's Term

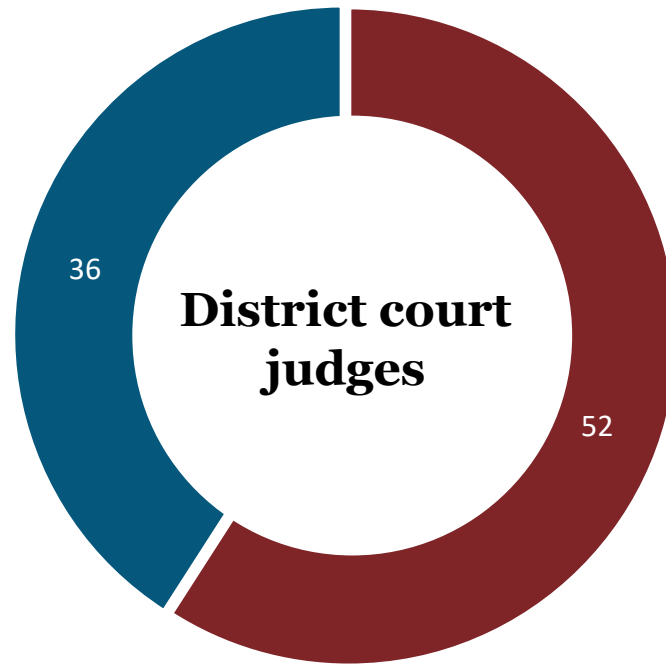

*George HW Bush signed the Judicial Improvement Act of 1990 which created 85 new federal judicial positions. Due to congressional opposition and the 1991 Iraq War, Bush was not able to fill many of these positions, ultimately leaving a large number for Clinton to fill.

105 federal judges will be eligible to take senior status during Trump's four years in office

Appointed by a Republican

Appointed by a Democrat

Senior status:

- Article III judges can qualify for senior status through the “Rule of 80”
- Under senior status, judges continue to hear cases, but only a fraction of the normal case-load (semi-retirement)
- Starting at age 65, a judge can take senior status after having served 15 years
- The years of service required for senior status decreases as age increases (at 66, only 14 years needed, etc.)
- Judges who take senior status create a vacancy for the president to fill
